Fantastic! One of my fondest memories was competing in a toothpick bridge contest in high school. I still feel I got as much out of hands on engineering projects in high school (R/C planes, skateboards, etc.) as I got out of the my engineering course work in college and grad school. Kids building stuff = much better engineers.

Environmental engineers are perhaps unsung heroes who have helped make the modern world what it is today, replete with relatively safe food and water, breathable air, largely plague-free living environments and energy-efficient fuel consumption to help power pretty much everything we do. The human population is around 7 billion and counting.
